The elite German Waffen-SS troops of WW2 were the first units ever issued their own distinctive camouflage uniforms. Their thoroughly researched, well developed, and specially designed smocks, zeltbahns, and helmet covers have been of great interest to collectors for decades, leading Michael D. Beaver and J.F. Borsarello to write an authoritative reference book on the subject in 1995.

Panzer Uniforms. The Waffen-SS is most noted for its use of camouflaged uniforms. The German Army experimented with camouflage clothing in the mid-1930s centering primarily on the zeltbahn (shelter quarter), however, the camouflaged patterns themselves were highly ineffective. During the same time, two distinguished officers of the SS-Verfügungstruppe (SS-VT), former Army officers during WWI, Paul Hausser and Felix Steiner, brought forth new ideas into the field of warfare.

In 1943, in order to save materials, the SS decided to replace the summer Drillich uniform with a camouflage uniform, which would also replace the smocks, commonly issued to SS troops. These saw wide use in the last years of the war, especially with formations formed after 1943. These were not seen in use by SS-Totenkopf until the summer of 1944.

Waffen-SS Camouflage - 2. KOMPANIE

The Reichswehr (Army of the Weimar Republic) started experimenting with camouflage patterns for Wehrmacht uniforms before World War II and some army units used Splittertarnmuster ("splinter camouflage pattern"), first issued in 1931, and based on Zeltbahn shelter halves/groundsheets. Waffen-SS combat units used various patterns from 1935 onwards.
