The NFL play call can be complicated to the untrained eye. However, as long as the viewer is able to decode what system the coach is using, it makes understanding the play call a bit easier. Often times, coaches will call 2 plays in the huddle, and the quarterback needs to run the play, or yell " kill kill" and go to the next play. This adds more variety for the coach and quarterback, however, the verbiage of the play call itself will often double in length.

Every good call sheet should have a section for your opening script. If you use arm bands to signal in plays, every play needs to have the # of the play call next to the play. You also need to have the exact full play that you called on your practice script listed on the call sheet otherwise again you are calling plays you haven't practiced.

I typically begin with the box 2A on the Call Sheet, which includes all the plays that our opponent's offense has run on 1 st and 10 from the 20-49 yard line. This normally is the box that has the largest sampling of plays in it. On each box of the call sheet (beginning with box 2A) I want to come up with 3 Defensive Calls;

The last tip is to run what your players are confident in. There is no perfect play call. In a sport like football where there are 22 players involved in any one play, it's easy for something to go wrong. There are very few times where they are lined up exactly like you thought they would be and the play goes like you drew it up on the board.

The method works by going right down the list of two play calls that the coaches have put together. If on first down the offense gets a first down, then the next first down on the list is called. If the two plays are run and its third down, then the play caller goes to his call sheet for the third down call for that situation.
