George Washington - Approved fraudulent invoices in exchange for cash bribes and hotel rooms worth more than $15,000.

Guilty pleas: 16 Navy officials. - Washington Post

The problem was an urgent one: Dr. Benjamin Church, chief physician of the Continental Army, had already been seized and imprisoned as a British agent, but there was no civilian espionage act, and George Washington thought the existing military law did not provide punishment severe enough to afford a deterrent. On November 7, 1775, the death penalty was added for espionage to the Articles of War, but the clause was not applied retroactively, and Dr. Church escaped execution.
