First edition (publ. Bloomsbury) Minaret is the second novel from the Sudanese author Leila Aboulela. Published in 2005, Minaret follows the journey of Najwa, a young woman forced to flee her home in Sudan in the face of the Second Sudanese Civil War.

Minaret (novel) - Wikipedia

Minaret is a provocative, timely, and engaging novel about a young Muslim woman—once privileged and secular in her native land and now impoverished in London—gradually embracing her traditional faith. With her Muslim hijab and down-turned gaze, Najwa is invisible to most eyes, especially to the rich families whose houses she cleans in London.

Leila Aboulela's Minaret is the story of Najwa, a Sudanese woman who was raised in privilege in Khartoum, until a coup forces her to flee to London with her mother and her brother. The novel follows her life as she transitions from a Westernized teen in Sudan, to a devout Muslim woman working as a nanny/maid in London. This novel examines issues of class, religion, culture, and gender, all ...

A Review of Minaret By Leila Aboulela for ENGL 358 In modern society there seems to be this over-arching generalization that Islam is this incredibly oppressive religion for women. This is coupled with the large lack of female voices in arguing a counter-case of this generalization that has allowed this view to go fairly undiscussed.
