On the other hand, pheochromocytoma and hyperaldosteronism, via the respective actions of catecholamines and hypokalaemia on the pancreatic beta-cell, impair glucose tolerance primarily by inhibiting insulin release.

What Are the Symptoms of Adrenal Disorders?
Adrenal disorder symptoms vary depending on which hormones are being overproduced:

Cortisol: Too much cortisol can lead to Cushing's syndrome. Symptoms of Cushing's syndrome include fragile skin that bruises easily, pink, or purple stretch marks, high blood pressure, diabetes, fatigue, and confusion. Upper body obesity, increased fat around the back of the neck called a "Buffalo hump", and thin arms and legs are also common.
