A picaresque, magic realism novel is not necessarily what you might expect from a Turkish author but this novel is just that. As well as being picaresque and magic realist, it is also historical, set in the late fourteenth, early fifteenth centuries. Our heroine is Hürü, born in 1496.

We haul it up from Kuwait to bases in Iraq. The Army escorts us. We have rooms in Kuwait, but when we are on the road (and we usually are) we sleep in our trucks—Mercedes cabovers with skinny sleeper berths and a
"doghouse" between the front seats, over the engine. A short trip takes two days. A trip to Baghdad can be done in a five-day turn.

Baghdad wasn't always synonymous with death and destruction, as ex-trucker Kevin Noble recalls in his first book. David Whetstone spoke to him. Modern day Iraq may look like hell on Earth but for Kevin Noble it was a place of adventure and a source of enduring memories.

Güneli Gün: On the Road to Baghdad
The latest addition to my website is Güneli Gün 's On the Road to Baghdad. This is an excellent picaresque novel using magic realism and clearly influenced by the One Thousand and One Nights. Our heroine, Hürü, born in late 15th century Constantinople, is the daughter of a former Karaman prince.
