Writing is similar to extreme sports. It demands determination, intense training, pushing yourself to your limits and beyond - it takes courage. And it is not hard to pinpoint what holds a person back: fear. "I'm afraid to fail." "Do I really have something to say?" "What if they don't like what I write?"

~~How-Do-You-Find-the-Courage-to-Write-by-Alice-Goldbloom---~~
A 'how to write' book with a difference, The Courage to Write does not address technique and craft. Instead, it explores author Ralph Keyes' conviction that 'good writing has less to do with acquired technique than with inner conviction' (pg. 117). A lot of what Keyes writes about will ring true with aspiring (and established) writers, and he does have some good advice.

Finding the courage to write is about sharing who you are without expectations or attachments. Successful writers need to let go of their need to be original. "Everything that needs to be said has already been said," said Andre Gide. "But, since no one was listening, everything must be said again."

Short story on bravery and courage. One cowardly person came to a master of martial arts and asked to teach him bravery. The master looked at him and said: - I will teach you only with one condition: one month you will have to live in a big city and tell every person that you meet on your way that you are a coward.

Bobby, I truly appreciate the note at the beginning of your story and the courage it took to write it! I think it shows who you are and how much you care and respect other people. We've all made the same mistake (I know I have). While in the midst of composing a story, I've added quotes that were compelling but only to find out later they had ...
