Abstract. In the UK health service trust has traditionally played an important part in the relationships between its three key actors: the state, health care practitioners, and patients and the public. However, in recent years the micro relationship between patient and health care practitioner and the macro environment in which these relationships operate have been subject to considerable change as the NHS has been modernised.

Trust Matters In Health Care - Kent Academic Repository

Institutional trust in health care practitioners in general, health care organizations and systems have also tended to be high. This may well have been the effect of patients' high level of interpersonal trust in their doctor, and also have been due to clinician's professional status, and the relatively recent provision of health care as a state guaranteed welfare right.
